ABOUT THE WOMEN'S INITIATIVE NETWORK

The Women's Initiative Network (WIN) for Kennedy Krieger Institute is a volunteer organization dedicated to raising awareness of, and funds and resources for, Kennedy Krieger by promoting and facilitating volunteerism that assists families served by the Institute. WIN responds to the needs of the Institute's patients and families, meeting smaller needs—such as welcome bags, meals and respite for inpatients and their families—and larger needs through the generosity of supporters, sponsors and donors.

EVENT OVERVIEW

WIN's sixth annual Hats & Horses Benefiting Kennedy Krieger Institute will be held at a new location—The Winslow, in downtown Baltimore. Guests will enjoy expertly prepared cuisine by Linwoods, specialty cocktails, and live and silent auctions, and then dance the night away!

This year, funds raised through the event will support a clinical trial of PediaCORE, an innovative movement training system created by a design team from the Johns Hopkins University Whiting School of Engineering and mentored by Dr. Amy Bastian, Kennedy Krieger's chief science officer and director of the Institute's Motion Analysis Laboratory.

For young children with brain and movement disorders, activities such as sitting, reaching, standing and walking are sometimes impossible without assistance. Interactive video games have become popular for helping older children and teens develop movement control, but none are well-suited for toddlers and young children, even though it's at this younger age when the brain is developing important neural connections that need to be used—or those connections will be lost. PediaCORE's custom-built interactive screen and suite of custom video games are designed to help young children with brain and movement disorders use those neural connections, and to challenge and train a young child's reaching, trunk and balance control.

Each year, this event welcomes more than 300 community stakeholders committed to supporting Baltimore's business, retail and nonprofit communities. Over the past five years, Hats & Horses sponsors and guests have collectively raised $1,480,000 to support the important work of Kennedy Krieger.
